

Anthologies

Introduction

An anthology is a compilation or collection of work by different authors, chosen by the compiler and published as one book. It may also be referred to as an edited book. When managing resources for communication to students, anthologies present a particular problem, as the work in each chapter, is often authored by a person or persons other than the book editor(s). This may give rise to author attribution, i.e. when the work in a chapter is attributed to the editor(s) of the book and not the author(s) of the chapter.

The anthology support in eReserve Plus, allows Faculty members to specify whether a Book resource is an edited work or anthology.

Faculty Interface

When creating a new Book resource via the Learning Management System, faculty members will be presented with a mandatory field for anthologies named Edited volume or anthology. This field is by default set to No which indicates the authors need to be supplied for the Source Document.

If the Edited volume or anthology field is set to Yes indicating the source document is an anthology then the Author(s) field for the Source Document form (on the left hand side) will be hidden and an Author(s) field will appear in the Reading form (on the right hand side). This will allow faculty members to provide the authors for the Reading (e.g. a chapter) rather than the Source document as required for anthologies.
